

Australian Bird List

Following
Systematics and Taxonomy of Australian Birds,
Les Christidis and Walter Boles
2008.

This list is presented in Microsoft Word. It can be modified to suit the individual user. It contains many birds the average bird watcher is unlikely to ever see.

These include some extinct birds (Which we will never see.) some vagrants that may or may not return to our shores, some birds that are seen on far off shore islands that are Australian Territories and many sea birds that are usually only seen by those who travel to sea on “pelagic” trips looking for birds. Some users may wish to remove those birds from the list.

A checklist for the birds likely to be seen in southern Queensland is included. As any such list can only be an approximation as birds move about and some included may be difficult to find in the area while some left out may be found. It is up to the individual to modify lists to suit their own needs.

More detailed lists are available from a number of other sites. Lists in a spreadsheet format are included below. These lists include columns indicating birds found in each state and with a bit of sorting and deleting it is easy to produce a list for any state and with a bit of effort a list form many areas.

To produce a list of birds seen in a particular area in C&B order is it best to use a spreadsheet list. In a second column indicate which birds have been identified. Place a marker (Z or similar) against the birds identified. Do a sort based on the indicator column. Delete the ones without a marker leaving the bird names required in the correct order.

There is no reason why people must keep lists or why those lists should be in a particular order. However if you wish to share lists or compare lists with other it is best that all such lists be in a similar order. Most people use the C & B order. Most field guides also use this order or an earlier order which is generally not too far off the 2008 one. The only field guide to use the C & B 2008 order is the second edition of the Slater Field Guide. The 8th edition Pizzey guide is close, The Morcombe guides follow the earlier C & B and no doubt will be updated while the Simpson and Day guide follows an earlier order.
